

University Courses

University courses provide opportunities for dialogue across disciplinary and departmental boundaries. They are an experiment in curriculum development, directed toward students interested in interdisciplinary subjects beyond their elected major. Students, however, may not use these courses to satisfy their university distribution requirements.

See UNIV (page 543–545) in the Courses of Instruction section.